From the NEW-YORK JOURNAL.

To the PRINTER.

SIR, New-York, September 19, 1767.

I HAVE before ſent you ſeveral occaſional remarks on the articles of news that have appeared in the public papers, which I have had the ſatisfaction to find, you publiſhed according to my deſire. I incloſe you herewith ſomething of the ſame kind, to which if you will give a place in your next paper, you will further oblige a loyal ſubject to his Majeſty King GEORGE the III, a ſincere and hearty friend to the whole Britiſh nation throughout all its dominions, and to the juſt rights of every individual in it.

To the people of Boſton, and all other Engliſh Americans.

MY BRETHREN,

IN looking over one of the late Boſton papers (the Boſton Evening Poſt of September 7) I was concerned to find two or three pieces, that have in my opinion, a tendency to deceive the people, and throw cold water upon their generous ardor in ſupport of their juſt rights.—The firſt I take to be a very artful contrivance of a ſecret enemy: It is ſome obſervation upon, and extracts from a ſermon preached above one hundred years ago, by one Mr. Oakes, who it ſeems was a miniſter of high reputation in his day, amongſt your pious forefathers; and conſequently their poſterity, at this time, are ſuppoſed to have a more than impartial veneration and regard for the doctrines he taught them, and left behind in his works. I am far from ſaying any thing againſt the doctrines contained in the extracts,—on the contrary, I approve them, and think them juſt and good;—and I have no doubt, but they were pertinent to the circumſtances of the times in which they were delivered.—But the deſign and application of them by this tranſcriber, is what I diſapprove, and ſuppoſe to be entirely different from the intention of the pious author. This tranſcriber ſeems to take it for granted, that the fears and jealouſies of the people that their rights and liberties are in danger, are unreaſonable;—that the reports and ſuſpicions ſpread among you, that ſome of your own falſe brethren and men in power, have acted the part of ſecret enemies, and are ſeeking to betray you into ſlavery, are falſe, unreaſonable and groundleſs,—abuſive calumnies, and ill uſage of perſons of great worth, uſe, and intereſt among you. That theſe ſuſpected perſons are ſome of the beſt men you have, pious, faithful magiſtrates, miniſters, &c. All this, the tranſcriber takes for granted,——nay he even compares thoſe ſuſpected perſons, to Moſes and Aaron, and thoſe who ſuſpect and oppoſe them to Korah, Dathan and Abiram. If this is not his deſign, to what purpoſe has he publiſhed the extracts? If it is his deſign, he ought to have ſhewn the caſes to be ſimilar, before he made the application. If there is no juſt cauſe for the fears and jealouſies that our rights and liberties are in danger; and if the men we ſuſpect have really acted the parts of pious, faithful miniſters and magiſtrates, and have given no juſt cauſe for thoſe ſuſpicions that have ariſen againſt them, then the extracts may be applied with propriety: But on the contrary, if it evidently appears, that there is abundant cauſe for all thoſe fears, jealouſies and ſuſpicions, then thoſe extracts are at this time not only impertinent, but are manifeſtly inſerted for an evil purpoſe, by a ſecret enemy, who is probably one of the very perſons ſuſpected.

Is there any thing that ought to be more ſacred to an Engliſhman, than the conſtitution of his country? Are there any things more plainly expreſſed, or more ſacred in that conſtitution, than the following rights, viz. The right of trials by juries of our peers (that is men in circumſtances equal and ſimilar to our own) indifferently choſen. The right of freely uſing and diſpoſing of our own property, either by ourſelves in perſon, or by repreſentatives freely choſen by ourſelves for that purpoſe, and by no other perſons whatſoever; and of being bound by no human laws but ſuch as we have aſſented to in like manner?——Have not theſe moſt ſacred rights been moſt manifeſtly violated, in the attempts to impoſe upon us the ſtamp-act, and other oppreſſive acts, to which we never conſented, either by ourſelves or repreſentatives, and which were paſſed in aſſemblies where we never had or can have a repreſentative;—compoſed of men equally ſtrangers to our perſons and circumſtances, and of intereſts quite oppoſite to ours?

If our rights in thoſe high inſtances are denied us, have we any thing that we can call our own? and can there be a more perfect ſlavery? After this, can it be ſaid, that our liberties are not in danger? And have not many of our own people uſed their utmoſt endeavours to enforce thoſe oppreſſive acts? Have they not artfully improved every occaſion to lull you into ſecurity and inactivity, to ſooth and cajole you with hopes, and alarm you with fears? Have they not been ſo very ingenious in diſcovering, and warm in urging every argument and pretence that could be deviſed in favour of the unconſtitutional ſtamp-act, &c. that the very authors and contrivers themſelves have adopted in England the arguments for enforcing, and againſt repealing the ſtamp-act, that were ſuggeſted to them, and uſed in America; by thoſe very men whom this tranſcriber would repreſent as pious, faithful magiſtrates and miniſters; the beſt men ye have among you, even ſuch as Moſes and Aaron! Be not deceived, my brethren, by the cunning devices of theſe lurking enemies, who under the maſk of piety and friendſhip would lure you into ſlavery. Have not the actions of theſe men juſtly expoſed them to thoſe reports, ſuſpicions and jealouſies that have been propagated to their diſadvantage? Let every reaſonable man judge.

My brethren, let us not be deceived nor divided.——All the Colonies, every man in England,—in the Britiſh dominions, who values his freedom, have all one common intereſt,—our ſecurity depends upon our union.

Have we not the greateſt reaſon to think, that it is not from kindneſs to any of the other colonies, that they are ſeemingly uſed with more lenity than New-York, but purely to divide them? If one colony is once enſlaved, none of the reſt, nor England itſelf, will long remain free!——The moſt grace that the moſt favoured muſt expect to find, will be ſuch as Polypheme promiſed Ulyſſes, to be devoured laſt.

It has been found by experience, in all ages, that in proportion as a people are free, they become virtuous, learned, polite, brave, powerful and happy; and the contrary to all as they approach toward ſlavery. By freedom, I do not mean an unreſtrained licentiouſneſs,——every thing of that kind, is an incroachment upon freedom, a ſpecies of ſlavery and tyranny.——I mean, a reaſonable freedom bounded by the equal rights of others, and ſocial relations. The law of nature is the law of GOD, irreverſible itſelf, and ſuperceding all human laws. It is that order and conſtitution of things which GOD has eſtabliſhed in their reſpective natures, and which perfectly reconcile the true intereſt and happineſs of every individual, with the true intereſt and happineſs of the univerſal whole. The laws and conſtitution of the Engliſh government, are the beſt we know of in the world, becauſe they approach the neareſt to the laws God has eſtabliſhed in our natures. They contain in them, the grand fundamental principles of that divine law—particularly they eſtabliſh our freedom in the undiſturbed uſe, and ſole diſpoſal of our own property; in being tried only by our peers, and governed by no human laws but thoſe to which we have given our aſſent, either in perſon, or by repreſentatives freely choſen by ourſelves for that purpoſe, which laws we can alter, amend or abrogate whenever we find them inconvenient,—— always making the divine laws the criterion of all thoſe we frame for ourſelves.—Theſe few particulars, which are contrived to ſecure our freedom in the ſtrongeſt manner, are the moſt valuable parts of the Engliſh conſtitution. To theſe it is principally owing that England emerged from a ſtate of ignorance and barbariſm to ſuch a pitch of grandeur in arts and arms, riches and power,—became a place of refuge for the oppreſſed,—the deſire of all nations,—the dread and envy of tyrants. Theſe principles of freedom in the Engliſh conſtitution, are the ſole cauſes of all theſe glorious effects.—Take away theſe, and you remove the very foundation of England's ſtrength, glory and happineſs; it will ſink with rapidity, from that grandeur to which it was raiſed by ſlow degrees, till it is no more diſtinguiſhed among the nations, but loſt in the vulgar herd of petty tyrants and ſlaves that infeſt and almoſt over-ſpread the globe. And ſhall thoſe men who exert themſelves in defence of their native rights, and the beloved, the glorious conſtitution of England, be treated as factious diſturbers of the publick peace, and branded with the opprobrious names of rebels and traitors? Forbid it juſtice; Forbid it, Oh guardian of Britain, and the rights of mankind! No, let thoſe who have attempted this barbarous violation of the moſt ſacred rights of their country, apply thoſe hateful epithets to themſelves. Let their conſciences determine whether they do not deſerve the names of rebels and traitors, not only againſt the laws of their country and their King, but againſt Heaven itſelf, and that GOD who has eſtabliſhed the laws of nature.

G.

NORFOLK, (Virginia) SEPTEMBER 5, 1767.

THIS day his Majeſty's ſloop of war the Hornet, commanded by a certain Jeremiah Morgan, droped down from her moorings oppoſite to the town. The evening of that day (as we may ſuppoſe) a bloody riotous plan was concerted to impreſs ſeamen, without conſulting the mayor, or any other magiſtrate; and preparations were accordingly made to carry it into execution. The tender was equiped with guns and men, and under cover of night the ſaid Morgan, accompanied with ſeveral of his officers, and about 30 ſeamen, came aſhore at the publick wharf, and ſo diſpoſed of the tender that ſhe entirely commanded all parts of it, lying with her broadſide near to the outer end, and bringing her ſwivel guns, which were well loaded, to that ſide which faced the wharf. Thus having made the neceſſary diſpoſitions either for an attack or retreat, they walked up to the tavern adjoining the wharf; and after taking a cheerful glaſs, to inſpire the Captain with a little Dutch courage, he, the ſaid Morgan, attended by his officers and life-guards, at 11 at night proceeded to that part of the town reſorted to by ſeamen, where they began with oaths and threats to the inhabitants to open their doors inſtantly, or they would break them down, ſaying they had the Mayor's warrant: The poor intimidated people as ſoon as poſſible opened their doors, and they ruſhed into their houſes like ſo many tigers and wolves, ſeizing every man they met with, and thoſe who made the leaſt reſiſtance they knocked down without ceremony, and lugged them away like dogs on board the tender, and from thence on board the Hornet. Several were carried away in this manner, with little or no oppoſition; but ſome time after, words and blows running high among them, the watchmen alarmed the adjacent inhabitants, by calling out A riot by man of war's men, with Capt. Morgan at their head! The noiſe of which in a ſhort time reached the ears of ſome of the magiſtrates, particularly Mr. Paul Loyal, who ſcarcely taking time to put on his clothes, ran into the ſtreet; and when he got about 50 yards from his door met two men with large clubs, holding a third faſt, and draging him along: He immediately aſked what they were after, upon which the poor priſoner at once replied that he was preſſed; Mr. Loyal inſtantly ſeized them by the collar, and ordering the poor priſoner to lay hold on one, which he chearfully did, they turned the tables upon poor Jacks, and hurried them to goal.——By this time ſome more of the inhabitants appeared; but as the drum had then begun to beat (our alarm for fire) every one left his houſe unarmed. It was then told Mr. Loyal that Morgan was gone towards the wharf, draging ſome men he had preſſed. On this information he haſted down as faſt as poſſible, accompanied by about 6 men, who had then joined him.—Before they got to the wharf, Mr. Loyal obſerved Morgan ſurrounded by 8 or 10 armed men, drawn up in form under a tree at the head of the wharf. He very calmly deſired thoſe with him to ſtand back, and he alone would go up to Morgan and ſee to ſettle the matter amicably. Accordingly he went up and accoſted Morgan in a very mild genteel manner, aſking him the reaſon of diſturbing the inhabitants, and why he ſtood there armed; his anſwer inſtantly was, That if he ſtired one foot he would be through his body by G—d, and preſented a drawn ſword to his breaſt. Mr. Loyal, coolly told him he was unarmed, and was ſurprized that Captain Morgan ſhould dread any thing from him, who came not with an attention to fight him. He repeated the ſame words over and over again, refuſing to know Mr. Loyal, after he had told him his name, ſaying, and making ſeveral paſſes at the ſame time, I won't know you by G—d; but ſuch were the effects of fear, and ſuch will always be the effects of a panick when it ſeizes the heart of a paltroon, that the paſſes and lunges he made were ſo widely diſtant that Mr. Loyal thinks if he had been an elephant of an over-grown ſize Morgan might poſſibly have hit his head or his tail.

The King of the Hornets had now ſounded a retreat, which, as Mr. Loyal advanced upon him, became more precipitate, inſomuch that Mr. Loyal begged of him to ſtay; that it was a ſhame for the Captain of a Man of War to run and leave his men, when there was no danger. In his retreat he ſeveral times called out Hornets! which was the ſignal for his life-guards to attend and ſhield his perſon; and they in a moment took their poſts on his right and left, ſo near that he could touch them with his elbows. Under this eſcort he reached the tender, and then (like a cock who fights beſt on his own dunghill) he pulled up freſh courage, knew Mr. Loyal, flouriſhed his ſword at him, abuſed him and every magiſtrate in town, in the moſt ſcurrilous language, and offered then to fight him on the head of a barrel of gunpowder.

At this juncture Mr. George Abyvon, the preſent Mayor, got down to the tender with at leaſt 100 more, made himſelf known to Captain Morgan, and in his Majeſty's name commanded the peace; He damned him and every man in Norfolk, ſaid he knew what he was about, and could anſwer it, and in a moment gave orders to fire; but not being immediately obeyed, he again called out, Fire, fire, G—d damn you, fire! The men, who then held the matches in their hands ready lighted, began to blow them; on which Mr. Loyal, who ſtood very near, aſked one of them if he was ſo mad as to obey his Captain's orders, telling him that if he did he would not ſurvive a moment afterwards. The man had the prudence not to fire, and there was immediately a propoſal made, and agreed to, to board the tender and take Morgan out; on hearing of which [illegible] that was a moment before a Hector or an Ajax, flung himſelf [illegible] the boat that was along ſide, pulled a man in after him, and rowed off to the man of war like a luſty fellow. There being no other boat to purſue the flying hero, and the command then devolving upon Mr. Hicks his lieutenant, who behaved genteely on the occaſion, things were ſoon amicably ſettled. About 10 of his men were apprehended and put into goal, who on the Monday following were diſcharged.

N. B. The tender lay ſo far from the end of the wharf that an active man could but with difficulty get on board; they had a plank, which was hauled in as ſoon as the Captain got on board.

THE above I believe, is a true narration of facts, as they occured on the night of the 5th inſtant.

GEORGE ABYVON.

NEW-YORK, OCTOBER 22.

Captain Lawrence ſpoke an Indiaman, from Madraſs and Bengal, the Captain of which informed him that an Engliſhman had lately ſet up for himſelf in that part of the world, and had collected ſuch a Banditti together, as to be able to ſee both the Mogul, and the Engliſh Army in the Field, but that it is thought he would ſoon be cut off, notwithſtanding he was allowed to be an excellent Soldier.

On Tueſday his excellency General Gage, with his aides-de-camp, ſet out for the Jerſeys and Philadelphia, to review the regiments quartered in thoſe parts.

The Edward, Miller, ſails this day for London, in whom goes paſſengers, the right hon. Lord William Campbell, Col. Fletcher, Major Folliot, Major Irwin, Major Livingſton, Capt. Murray, Mr. Owen, Mr. Hill, and Mr. McKay.

NEW-HAVEN, OCTOBER 5.

Captain William Harriſon ſays, "During my ſtay at Turk's-Iſland, an armed Spaniſh ſchooner arrived at Shelburne town, with diſpatches from the preſident of St. Domingo, the purport of which, as far as I can learn, was propoſals from him to his Majeſty's governor of Turk's-Iſland, of a reciprocal delivery of ſuch ſlaves as might make their eſcape from other Iſlands, on paying 25 pieces of eight for apprehending of each ſlave, and one rial per day for maintenance; with an offer at the ſame time to the Engl[illegible]

...ment, as he or the British inhabitants settled at Tucker's-Island might have occasion for."

BOSTON, OCTOBER 29.

Within a month have arrived here from London, twelve vessels, viz. Captains Jarvis, Hulme, Daverson, Davies, Hall, Bruce, Calef, Scott, Omand, Smith, and Barnard: Three others are hourly expected, viz. Captains Marshall, Watt, and Folger.

It is with pleasure we can inform our readers, that within the last year, thirty thousand yards of cloth were manufactured in one small county town in this province; so far does the spirit of industry begin to prevail among us, and we hope will in this way, assisted by frugality and œconomy, daily afford us a more promising prospect of our emergency from the present alarming scarcity of money, and consequent stagnation of trade; and from the almost universally encreasing complaints of debt and poverty,

CHARLES-TOWN, NOVEMBER 24.

LAST Friday the Honourable Commons House of Assembly of this Province, by his Excellency the Governor's Permission, adjourned to Tuesday the 5th of January.

The Ship Mary, Captain Loveday, mentioned in our last to have run ashore on Tucker's Island, near Edisto, we hear, is entirely lost.

It is said, that the People of Boston have resolved to discourage as much as they possibly can, the Importation of all Kinds of Goods from Great-Britain, but chiefly those which the late Act of Parliament hath laid a Duty upon.

Governor Grant and the Superintendant's Deputy, we are told, are holding a Meeting with the Creek Indians, at Picolata in East-Florida.

It is said the Outrages committed by the Cowkeners, at Oboee, and by the Creeks at St. Mary's River, have not had the bad Consequences which naturally might be expected from such Violences, as the Perpetrators were pursued.

The following is the Account of the Action and Death of our late Captain, "The whole Number of Cholluca that were drawn among the Creeks was upwards of eight hundred, but only about seventy assembled with the Enemy, except the Red Captain, one of our safest Friends in that Nation; he with a Party of 42 Men were set upon near the Cahuba River by the Creeks, who killed him, his Son, and twenty-four others. The Chactaws blame a White Man, a Trader, for betraying them to the Creeks. Letters from the Country of the Creeks say, that they were a hundred in Number, that they killed thirty out of forty Chactaws, and brought one Prisoner Home, whom they burnt; they declare the Chactaws behaved with great Bravery, for when they had fought 'till their Ammunition was expended, they rushed in amongst the thickest of their Enemies, knocking them down with their Tomahawks and the Butt-ends of their Muskets. The Creeks own the Loss of twelve Men, among whom were Molton, another good Friend of ours, his Son, and the Oakfuskee King. The Victors delivered the Gorget, Medal and Commission of the Red Captain, who was a Great-Medal Chief, to Mr. Hewit, a Trader, in order to be returned to the Commissary, or the Superintendant.

Captain Henry Rogers, in the Sloop Sparrow, on the 3d of November, spoke with the Ship Peggy, of New-York, Captain Lawrence, bound for St. Eustatia, all well.

In Captain Freeman, who arrived here last Wednesday from Boston, came Mr. ——— Waring, Mr. Jonathan Badger, and sundry other Passengers.

A Gentleman in this Town has lately had sent to him a Spanish Potatoe, which Measures nineteen Inches in Length, the same in Diameter, and weighs ten Pounds and an half.— It was raised in St. Stephen's Parish in this Province.
